Italian astronomer Giovanni Schiaparelli published his observations of Mars in 1877. He used the Italian word canali, meaning "channels," to describe the near-straight lines he saw on the Martian surface. He believed the channels were natural features.

But the word canali was mistranslated to English as "canals," implying artificial structures. The idea of intelligent life on Mars became quite popular, lasting until the second half of the 20th century when spacecraft such as Mariner 4 and the Viking landers took a much closer look at the planet.

A Signal From Mars was written in 1901, during the height of "Mars fever," when the general population expected at any day to meet our Martian neighbors.

Thank you to the
Spring Valley Concert Band
Schaumburg, IL
for play-testing this arrangement.
